MEN'S & BOYS' OUTFITTERS

ing the Russian prisoners of war for which Japan will present an itemized bill.

Japan is known to have given her word to China not to retain the railroad, which was really built for strategic purposes. But if China prefers the money to the railroad, Japan could not be accused of bad faith.

Both Russia and Japan, if the latter retains the road, are to be allowed to have "railroad guards," for the protection of the railroad property, and in case of disorder, calculated to threaten their interest, are mutually to be permitted to send troops, but the number is in no case to exceed those required and they are to be forthwith recalled as soon as their mission is accomplished.

This, likewise, is a very important provision. The east and west Chinese eastern line, and the southern line, as far as Kuenchow, still in Russia's possession, would, in case of a future issue, give her control of the largest part of Manchuria—the whole vast territory from the fertile valley of the Sungari, called the "granary" of the province, northward.

Another important provision is that Japan's succession to the Russian and Lao Tung loans, which Russia surrenders, is conditional upon China's assent.

The armistice was not arranged today, and it is not improbable that it will be conducted directly by the generals on the field of battle.

Dramatic Moment.

Wonderfully dramatic and tragic were the circumstances at the stores building in the navy yard yesterday when M. Witte came from the secret conference room in which peace was decided upon and made the announcement to his secretaries. Every preparation had been made at St. Petersburg and at the front to continue the war. The military party was determined, and Linchew was to try conclusions with Oyama.

If a rupture had come the signal was to be given to Linchew, and an imperial manifesto, already prepared, would have been issued, proclaiming to the Russian people the impossibility of accepting the conditions asked by Japan and calling upon the Russian people to support the Czar and the government in its decision not to pay tribute to the foe. Neither M. Witte nor any member of the Russian mission believed peace possible.

His departure had been made. The Russians had not only packed their trunks, but a special train had been engaged to take the party to New York. M. Witte went to the navy yard without hope that his adversaries would accept the ultimatum given by the Czar. A code had been arranged to cover the contingency of a rupture, and if the fatal words were uttered when M. Witte emerged from the room, to the private telephone, which connected directly with the Russian headquarters, announce the rupture, which was to be called instantly to St. Petersburg and flashed along to Manchuria as the signal for Linchew to attack.

Great Battle Prevented.

The phrase agreed upon was a conventional one. For almost an hour the secretaries waited, their nerves at high tension. Suddenly the door was thrown open and M. Witte stepped out. His face was flushed. He seemed to be restraining himself as he advanced. The secretaries held their breath until suddenly he stopped. Instead of words that might mean death to the world, he said, "Gospoda mir!" (Gentlemen, peace).

The secretaries could hardly credit their senses. M. Witte held out his arms, and the chief, whom they had addressed as "the man of the sword," threw himself into M. Witte's arms and embraced and kissed him on both cheeks, after the Russian fashion. Then in turn M. Witte embraced and gave the kiss of peace to Mr. Nabokoff and Mr. Planchon. All were overpowered with emotion.

Working On Treaty.

Mr. Deminoff and Mr. De Martens worked until 8 o'clock to-night on the draft of the treaty. They completed the wording of the preamble and three articles, and were discussing the articles relating to the cession of the Chinese Eastern Railway when they adjourned until to-morrow.

Up to 11 o'clock to-night neither the Japanese Emperor nor the Russian Emperor had responded to the appeals sent by their respective plenipotentiaries yesterday asking for the conclusion of an armistice.

"WHISTLE SOFTLY," PRESIDENT SAYS

Peace is in Sight, But is Not Yet An Accomplished Fact.

(By Associated Press.) OYSTER BAY, L. I., August 30.—"Whistle softly," we are getting into the thin timber, but we are not yet out of the woods.

This homely admonition represents accurately President Roosevelt's view of the situation at Portsmouth. Peace is in sight, but is not yet an accomplished fact. Profoundly as he is gratified at the result already achieved by the plenipotentiaries, the President feels fully that most important work remains yet to be done. Until that is accomplished it is scarcely the part of wisdom, he thinks, to go more than "whistle softly."

It is probable the President may make a formal expression concerning the work accomplished at Portsmouth by the Russian and Japanese envoys, but the intention to-day was that he would not make such a statement, but that he would only be given free of charge.

England's Tribute.

(By Associated Press.) LONDON, August 31.—With the passing away of the first sensation incident to the announcement of peace, the most striking note of public feeling in England is the universality of the tribute paid to the invaluable services which President Roosevelt has rendered to the cause of humanity. Not England alone, but the whole world, is hastening to pay its meed of praise to the peace-maker. Mayors and public bodies of various kinds in Great Britain are passing resolutions or sending messages expressing their appreciation of the world's indebtedness to the President.

WORK OF REPORTING PEACE CONFERENCE

Splendid Work of Associated Press Generally Recognized. Men Who Did It.

One of the notable incidental features of the Portsmouth peace conference was the thoroughness and accuracy with which the progress of the negotiations was made known from day to day, through the instrumentality of the Associated Press. The entire arrangement for reporting this most important event in which all the world was interested, was another signal triumph for the most famous news-gathering organization in existence. Not only did the representatives of the Associated Press enjoy the confidence of the envoys to a remarkable and significant degree, but their bulletins frequently carried to high diplomatic officials here and abroad the first news of some development of vital importance.

Credit for this splendid work is due in chief to the influence and reputation of the organization itself, but in no less a degree to the gentlemen who were on the field, actually doing the work of reporting. These gentlemen were Howard Thompson, Chief of the Associated Press Bureau in St. Petersburg, who wrote the account of the "Red Sunday" massacre in the Russian capital; Mr. Salvatore Carrel, Chief of the Italian Bureau; Mr. James P. Williams, Mr. O. Bailey, of Washington, and Mr. J. A. Bates, telegraph operator. The order in which these names are given has no relation to the importance of their services, since each did his full duty, and the opportunity was given to each to render exceptional and brilliant service. There were named against them a corps of correspondents, including many of the most able newspaper men in the world, but admittedly the Associated Press men carried off all the honors.
